

Durban's legacy

Three unique projects, among others, may change the face of Durban as we know it. This is 'otherwhere'

WORDS: DAVID A STEYNBERG :: PHOTOGRAPHS: ISTOCK/SUPPLIED

In anticipation of this year's World Congress on Architecture, UIA 2014 Durban, three legacy projects have been identified that will kick-start regeneration in the inner city, attracting both people and business to the "other" nooks and crannies in the city: other regions, other contexts, other social structures, through other practices.

Nina Saunders is project coordinator for the spatial legacy projects, both as local government liaison for the UIA 2014 Organisation Committee and as programme manager for city architects. She hopes these projects will reinvigorate and repurpose certain assets in the inner city.